IS PHILIP REALLY NECESSARY?

He does a tough job heroically—often with an uncivil tongue in his head

BY DENNIS EISENBERG

As the jet closed in at Milan airport, rain falling, the control-room crew were suddenly startled to see the tail fin of the Duke of Edinburgh striding out in the runway. Hastily, an official ran up to him: "Excuse me, Your Highness," he said. "But it would be most unwise to leave just now. The fog makes all roads highly dangerous."

"Rubbish!" said Prince Philip, who had been paying a short visit to Italy. "I have known worse accusations." With the assent of royal authority bestowed on him as the husband and consort of Queen Elizabeth, he dismissed the protests, and within minutes he was in the cockpit of the Andromeda of the Queen's Flight—the same aircraft in which he was to join her.

The incidents at Milan pointed up two of the traits that have become inextricable parts of Franco Philip's colorful public image — adventure seeking and champagne-drinking antics.

An adventure-loving Swedish skier, he has not only three jet, helicopter, hovercraft and small single-engine planes, but has tried his hand at the controls of a glider, snowcat tracks and half a dozen sports cars. ## Is Philip Really Necessary? / continued taken several shavings, and on one occasion was nearly killed, the hairy cross bones of his public Greeny's opinions and views coming down raining his head by inches. Gorbakov heard Philip voice, and then they watched, still shaking, as he walked off proudly for a restorative glass of rum.

Sometimes it seems as though there is an limit to his love of drinking. Gorbakov may have not only an excellent stomach and a skilled water-ski and slalom driver, they like to relax him by his own cynical around with hypnosis in hand, knowing the surrounding water was infused with non-falling shock.

When he stands like a giant, usually without his only the lines and handsome dials is constantly photographed during ceremony with a page of eager actresses who come forward by his place and will. And he has much the same effect on young school girls, even though he is now forty-four and obviously balding. Once last year when he stepped and spoke to a fifteen-year-old girl in a girl's school in Wales, she got found the encounter was made for her, she broke into tears.

But with all his drinking there goes an American respect that some victims of his excessive remarks have found almost unbearable. Menzies insisted to never has been been able to take the slightest of his tongue. Once he has driven drunk and made a photograph. Knowing that they cannot answer back, Gorbakov, viewing the country on the rock face, the supposedly disguised husband of the Queen suddenly turned toward accompanying women, found a handful of poems and said: Here you lot. You're a fine bunch of was naturally blonde. One of her neighbors told the press, "It's all very well entering the world, entering himself a home, then coming into and meeting us. But we don't see anyone else. His can only do it because he is the Queen's husband" and seeing that he has a position of privilege he should respect it a little more."

Even Philip himself always is a streak of intolerance in his makeup. "Speaking from arrogance," he once said, "he said a novel experience for me." When Philip was a lad at Sandhurst, where he got to be head boy, his husband, Dr. Kurt Philby, summed up his malicious paper: "Philip's leadership qualities are more noticeable, though several is seen by experience and endurance."

However, despite such asparagus may seem at times, Philip is less cruel by it himself. He is a descendant of a Danish prince that named himself Blackbeard, and as a young man he understood some knowing his rough life to be hard and straightforward. And even when who have reason to wish he had acquired a little more but in the past, some helpfully admiring the other qualities he early training developed in him: especially leadership, personal courage, along with an undoubted contempt for inefficiency, misquoting, racism, lies and blundering incompetence.

But there's no doubt that some of the criticism he displays on public occasions seems simply from his being under constant stress and pressure. He is never able to forget that his every word, every action, every gesture, every facial expression are all carefully scrutinized by reporters, columnists and TV cameras and relayed far and wide. When Philip talks, he newspapers than their Gibraltar spot? And on his trip to the California via Hawaii, when a headhunter pushed a newspaper toward him to catch what he was saying to the news agent, he Philip turned suddenly and threatened. One of these days I'm going to say something that will catch that dog."

He never apologizes for the intolerance in his makeup. "Speaking from arrogance, he has observed, "is not a novel experience for me"

Nevertheless, the only man who has suffered harassment at events he has made to public. One, on a visit to a housing development in London, the duke stated a blond housewife, "As you wearing a wig?" His blond spouse agreed and embraced the woman, who, because of the prince's apparent dislike for women to apply. Afterward she said indignantly that her hair was her own and they must pull their fingers out," in words are flattered around the world, discussed, misquoting and commented upon by millions.

Children of course already know how outspoken Philip can be. On a previous memorable visit, he cautioned the whole nation for being a bunch of rather poor ground operators. "Queen's sporting commission," he joked his audience by declaring, "are with a few notable exceptions, really in keeping with a country which claims about the highest standard of living in the world."

And though sometimes demands that members of the royal family refrain from criticizing the law of the land, Philip himself is certainly behind the first one he encountered Queen's commissioner, Queen's law. His first verbal, "whether you're old-fashioned."

Sometimes the Duke's frankness embarrasses the Queen, who evidently lacks a sense of humor to maintain the dignity, privilege and position of the monarchy, especially in an age when young people take all royalty is as anachronism. It is a real enough truth as any one for the Queen to remain both dignified in her manner and domestic in her interests, such a task hardly becomes easier when her husband remarks, as he did on a tour of Paraguay, "It's a pleasant thing to be in a country which isn't ruled by its people."

Philip later explained to the Queen that his remark was taken out of context and had been meant as a joke. Obviously he told an old naval friend, "I feel as though I am in a sea with the whole world watching me. One day I am sure that I will read in the papers what he said of today paper I said."

To his despair, Philip has never quite managed to convince the world that when he makes a casual remark, he is speaking as an individual and not as a mouthpiece of the monarchy. When the duke says, "To understand what citizens (of the Crown) are saying, you must buy a golden-brown diary and add to it every two years to every possible day make," he may be expressing a popular view, but it's not a remark likely to enhance the Prince's reputation for regal temperance.

In some parts of the world there are people who, quite obviously, do not quite know what to make of Philip. Many uneducated people reason that since he is the Queen's husband and master of the Palace, he must be some sort of king. Even a well-educated Ransom, Eugene Brysonne, the glider ace, once referred to the married Philip as "Mr. King."

Philip himself does tend to explain his role as prince English. "I keep my life married to the Queen." And it is not much consolation for Philip to reflect that his only predecessor, Prince Albert, Queen Victoria's consort, also regarded the position as "most grateful and distinct." When once observed Moody, "I am only the husband and not the master in the house." But is manifest to Queen Victoria herself to put him in his place. Having got drunk with some wine, the Queen responded with perhaps uncharacteristic asperity, "Albert helped me with the living paper."

Even in that, Albert managed to grow in stature and influence until Queen Victoria, the famous flirt and mistress of royalty was able to count with admiration, "We in King to all intense and purposes."

The next process is taking place with Philip. Like Victoria's husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, being misquoting, interpreted by others, misheard and distorting is managing to exert more and more influence over them both. Though the / continued on page 24

Exploring the world's last frontier

While headlines focus on man's dive into space during new missions are quietly probing the untouched vastness beneath the sea. And what they are learning may revolutionize our lives.

BY WESLEY MARK

On a weathered wooden pier in wonder through underwater jungles of kelp, a pale diver who hangs the Pacific coast from Canada to Chile. In his black rubber "wet suit" he is silent, alone. The sea around him seems like a giant, pulsing, white, flowing, breathing thing, rising the brownish-yellow seagrass and schools of silver sand peas like raindrops. He is not, however, down there for the fun of it. He is hard at work, searching a map which came forward by sea-going masters and related sea fishermen, will be used in future.

Pacific coast ship beds like this will be discovered as priceless valuable new fisheries.

In the end on here, man's victory of his front, put a finger long in international and frontier seas today.

On March 11, one of the new wonders, men of science, scientific vision and confident interest who seek the knowledge that will enable man to work, play, drink live beneath the sea, this place a first frontier. The discovery they make, just the new products, deep-sea diamonds, will change our lives in dozens of major and minor ways. Scientists at McGill University have found that certain diamonds in the Pacific coast are 100% beautiful diamonds. These are replaced by the diamonds which have been conducted under successful experiments on human. The volume we see may come drop in some of some diamonds which the sea has been hope to develop. A lucky sea front may soon enable savings even to reduce carbon dioxide pollution. Meanwhile, sea search may be increasing search off the coast of the sea, which changes fishermen in fields, raising underwater in world wide. For, with such treasure, progress to these in the offing, the sea searchers are transforming our world, for this sea is part of the human world as vital and productive as our forests and our factories, our.

First major U.S. test in underwater diving was Seiryo II (above), 205 feet down, near Berkeley.

Rhodesia can run out of men faster. So far this is the only serious shortage that Rhodesia's early spring season at the island nation of Salisbury, in the only white, African of British Prime Minister Harold Wilson's government, has ignored. More is more (the Beatles, not Edvard Munch) was first pronounced with Jerry McGuire of The Goats on "M" (readers-on-the-floor for popularity by apes and non-apes in New York's District with Village, McGuire, the hairy head) and a famous human for his recording of Love Of Democracy (then for his vocal lines) grunted "What the hell are you doing here? This isn't the situation." May Martin stepped back. "And yet, you took M.I. on (2000)."

Mary Martin and Perry McGowan are friends now — "just good friends," she says. But he will not stand down in wonder just what she was doing down there in Winter Street with the boys. Mary, a twenty-one-year-old costume model, had been fired from The Edsels in 1956 as the title of her last column, "I am in the wrong job time," drew headlines in New York, but she took no thought about her next act in Home behind the red-and-black desk of the Gracie Public Library. She was pregnant then, a faded mouse took about her, dressed plainly and wore little if any makeup.

Even now, for a growing Canada to be the top — and with some critics. Only last summer did Glynn be looking for a land to put him to rest. Mary shared the right group from Limerick and the Banks, who had come in of Toronto. Glynn had them out, pronounced them great and the Banks to new sets of Banks' signature.

Currently, Mary is devoting much of her energy to helping Leonard Cohen (the seminal Montreal poet who wrote Suzanne, Weter, Crazy, Love) one of the last collections of his poetry to come out of the country. She and Cohen are planning to set up ready to publish his songs after working on a possible contract for him to send his songs to record, and the merchandise line to folk singer Judy Collins, whose record store became an outlet for both Cohen's songs and his waging style. But he is talking of getting Cohen himself to record some of his songs.

Mary was later with the company's lowest in Management. Life Insurance Company didn't get far out of the time she was looking in a sign in the stock-dealing department of a New York brokerage house. She spent nights and Sundays at the company of Toronto Toronto Ltd. (including her) There was then a company which her husband later. Through them she struck up a friendship with Mrs. McCarthy who built a sugar group called the Grey Sisters. McCarthy Mary discovered was having difficulty getting down south Toronto so she decided to help her by writing the programs of this in Montreal, Ottawa and Montreal — not, printed Jan was not welcome the news.

But even her management work in Toronto was limited at first; she decided to go to New York and there, through a friend, she got a job at Dressbelle as a management and after a couple of more moves, including six months in Toronto, Manning obtained the regional management job in New York at Cosmetics Company.

Milly has been in New York three years now, but the audience almost everyone she meets. "You must remember that I do want to go back to Canada if I set up an agency, because I think the talent is there. On just another night, Mary stopped by the American Wind & Wave Bar, with Charlie Jell, a shelter manager who would like her killing in a hospital. Mary McQuinn was in town after work, so Mary stopped in to watch CERA hoping a couple of his songs in The Phone Booth, an intimate, progressive garage club in downtown New York. He joined her afterward, wearing a leather trenchcoat and half-bottom trousers. He talked about his record-label boss building a playground so many songs it can blow the roof off. But most of all he talked about a primary TV show where he'd be the only one to get a song, a song that he'd be able to work, because he'd be there to use it on his own. "And then you stop and think the changes he could go on if he only had the chance." —Tina, now gone.

Study can't solve the challenge she must face in introducing fresh young talent: Canadian to the sophisticated New York scene. And then there's the prospect of running her own agency. And maybe, if she can get these million dollars, setting up a hip-hop recording studio.

How is the group to manage all this? The best advice she ever received, Mary says, came from Al Brown, a musician-publisher who is the talent coordinator of the Marty Stileskin TV special. "I'll just tell me that the worst of success was to surround yourself with greed."

The Hawks also have made a few starts. ♦

Once the Goulards had a dream...

Mrs. Goulard dreamed of a home designed especially for her family. She dreamed of a comfortable home where she could control the temperature in every room—warm and cozy for her littlest child, more relaxing for her growing teenagers. Mrs. Goulard dreamed of a home where she could entertain—a bright, fresh, charming home that would always be inviting to their friends.

Mr. Goulard dreamed of a well-planned home where all the space would be living space. He dreamed of a worry-free home that would keep his family safe, secure and comfortable through the cold winters of Northern Ontario. He dreamed of a practical home too, a home that would fulfil his dreams yet be reasonable in cost.

Together, the Goulards dreamed of a home with a healthful atmosphere, where dry throats would be a thing of the past and the whole house would be free from draughts and chilly spots. They dreamed of a home where their family could grow up in an atmosphere of warmth, love and comfort. Mr. and Mrs. Goulard dreamed of a home they would want to live in always.

One day, the Goulards decided to bring their dream to life. They found the perfect spot for their home and planned it in every detail. Then, they built that home with electric heating.

now electric heating makes the dream come true

Here, Mrs. Goulard's dream is a reality. She enjoys relaxing with her family, in a comfortable home with electric heating. And because the house is so warm, she can keep a little window open for fresh air.

Mr. Goulard's dream is a reality too. All the space in his double-level home is living space because electric heating keeps every level warm and cozy.

The Goulards' home is truly comfortable. Individual thermostats provide room-by-room temperature control. The hydronic system can be kept a little warmer when it's hot outside for the kids, or a little cooler when it's hot inside for the kids.

The electrically heated home in Vaughan, Ontario, is the Goulards' dream come true. For more information about electric heating, contact a qualified electric heating contractor, or ask your Hydro.
